

The Cloak and Dagger Affair

Edward Lambert

The Cloak and Dagger Affair

Chamber opera in one act by Edward Lambert after the play Amor de Don Perlimplín con Belisa en su jardín by Federico García Lorca (1928)

for three voices with piano accompaniment

Characters

Don Perlimplín, a scholarly gentleman, bass

Belisa, his young wife, soprano

Marcolfo, Perlimplín's manservant, mezzo-soprano

Chorus, sung by the cast

Notes

1. An area of the stage should be designated as "off-stage", in which the cast are clearly outside the action but remain visible to the audience. A screen is suggested for this purpose.
2. The score also provides for some optional on-stage percussion to be played by the cast. The sounds would preferably be provided by props of various kinds: flowerpots in the garden, for example, or a stick that Perlimplín carries, or crockery that Marcolfo serves up, etc. But a musical instrument may be provided, if desired, in which case the sound should be of temple blocks or similar which have a dramatic impact.
3. The production should include dance.

The middle-aged Don Perlimplín has been persuaded to marry a sensual young girl, Belisa. It is the day after their wedding, and Perlimplín's manservant, Marcolfo, reveals that while he slept during the night, Belisa entertained five lovers. Perlimplín seems untroubled by this gossip. He is more concerned that Belisa has fallen for another man, a stranger in a red cloak who has been seen walking in the garden. She receives a love-letter from this apparent youth and Marcolfo tells her the stranger will meet her at ten o'clock that evening. When Perlimplín sees him, he chases after him, while the besotted Belisa sings a serenade to her lover by way of encouragement. A moment later the stranger in the red cloak appears with a dagger through his heart. It appears he has been killed by Perlimplín; but the man in the red cloak is revealed to be Perlimplín himself, who dies as Belisa lovingly embraces him.
